Join us for a 5-day, 4-night exploration of Florida’s climates! This seminar will pair leading Professors and Master Teachers from across the humanities and ecological sciences to give educators the tools to observe and analyze environmental change. The program uses perspectives from culture, history, and ethics to examine our contemporary challenges.

The seminar is rooted in the unique history and culture of North Central Florida. Through hands-on lesson activities and field trips, we will compare archival and geological climate data, walk through the Austin Cary Forest, dive into Florida’s Poe Springs, explore Native American and ecological adaptations to sea level rise along the Gulf Coast, and enjoy locally-sourced meals. Along the way, educators will learn a variety of tools, including systems thinking, science fiction, carbon measurement, ethical inquiry, ecosystem mapping, journalism, and oral history, to help students understand and consider the need to adapt to a changing climate. Together, we will experience firsthand how teaching Florida’s climates will affect the decisions we must make about our collective future. Enjoy free accommodation at the UF Reitz Union Hotel and the opportunity to explore Gainesville and North Central Florida with new friends.

This seminar is open to all educators, including full-time, certified K-12 public or private school teachers of any subject, media specialists, librarians, guidance counselors, school and district administrators, state college professors, museum educators, National Park Service interpreters, and Florida State Park interpreters. Documentation for In-Service credits will be provided.
